ruled.

The Court was of opinion that most of the contessions should have been excluded from the jury, and a new trial was granted. The fact that the confessions were obtained by promises of favor was clearly made out in the evidence of Mrs.
Bishop, but was contradicted by another witness. The Court was of the opinion that they should not have been received under the circumstances, and were incompetent.

Justice Offin dissented, as he maintained that the confessions were admissible. Justice Offin dissented, as he maintained that the confessions were admissible.

Judge Wylie did not understand that the testimony of the detective (Hail) was incompetent, however obnoxious the manner of procuring it might have been.

Judge Humphreys should give his vate for its utter destruction, and stop it at the the threshold, where it should never see the light against a man whose liberty was in danger. He would exclude it as incompetent, on the ground that it was not policy.

Judge MacArthur had got the idea from the opinions expressed on the subject, as it was thought to be such an abuse of obtaining detective testimony, that the winness should not have been allowed to testify. For himself, he thought it should not have been allowed to testify. For himself, he thought will be a pressed his dissent on that toint. oint.
